What is an out-of-pocket cost?

These are health care expenses you're responsible for paying. They're not reimbursed by your insurance provider.

Deductible: what you pay for a prescription before your health plan starts to pay for its part of the cost.

—say you have a $1,000 deductible and a medical bill for $2,000—

You'll pay $1,000
and hit your deductible

Your health plan will cover the rest of the medical bill

Co-Pay/Coinsurance: what you pay for a prescription and/or medical service. Often you'll have a co-pay, which is a fixed amount. Or you might have coinsurance, which will be a percentage of your cost.

—say you have medication that costs $100—

You'll pay $20

Your health plan covers the rest[‡]

[‡]Your actual coverage will depend on your type of insurance and health plan.

Co-Pay offer: financial support from your medications manufacturer for privately insured individuals. It aims to reduce out-of-pocket costs in the following way:

Pay as little as $0

Novartis Patient Support pays the rest of the out-of-pocket cost

Here's the good news. Novartis Patient Support provides a Co-Pay Plus offer for SCEMBLIX, if you're privately insured. It can help with some of those out-of-pocket costs.
